Good old bike seat-cover

We've got this good, old bike that serves as the family grocery shopping bike. It's been in the family for a slong as I can remember, and it's starting to look rusty and worn. The latter can be charming, but in this case a makeover is required. First off is a seat cover for rainy days. You can always use a plastic bag, but with this tailor made cover you can look smart on a sunny day as well.

What we used

Waxed fabric/waterresistant fabric
Elastics
Safety pin

How we did it

Maesure the approximate surface of the seat and draw it on to the fabric. Add 1 cm for the seams. Measure the tallest point of the seat as well, and add 3-4 cm to it. At last measure the circumference and add a couple of cm for the seams. Make one seat shaped piece of fabric and one long thin one.

Use pins to attach the.

Cut some incertions where it's curvy to make the sewing easier and prettier.

Sew around. Then sew the short ends of the long fabric together.

Make a 1,5 cm fold all around the lower end of the seat cover. Sew along it, but leave a small whole to pur the elastic through.

That's it. Tighten the elastic as much as you need to be able to take the cover on and off the seat. Take it for a test drive!
